

WCC

WORKING FOR WISCONSIN

The Wisconsin Conservation Corps revives a 60-year-old idea.

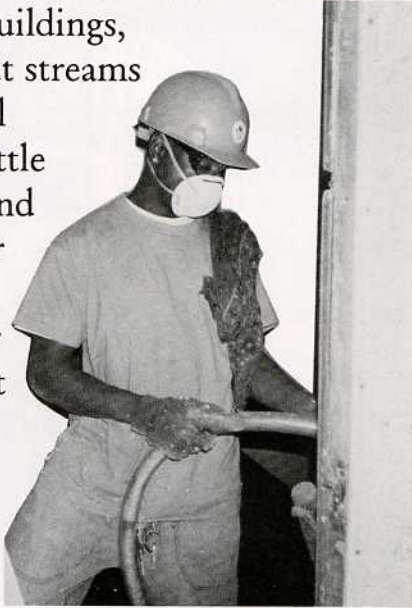

Inspired by Franklin D. Roosevelt's successful Civilian Conservation Corps of the 1930s, Wisconsin established the WCC in 1983.

The idea is simple, yet direct. The WCC provides a great opportunity for young people to work and learn valuable skills while enhancing and improving the state's natural resources.

The work is hard, but the variety is unbeatable.

WCC corps members plant trees, build hiking and ski trails, construct park shelters and benches, weatherize buildings, preserve trout streams and historical buildings, battle forest fires, and clean up after floods—and that's just for starters. Most of the work is outdoors and doesn't stop for bad weather.

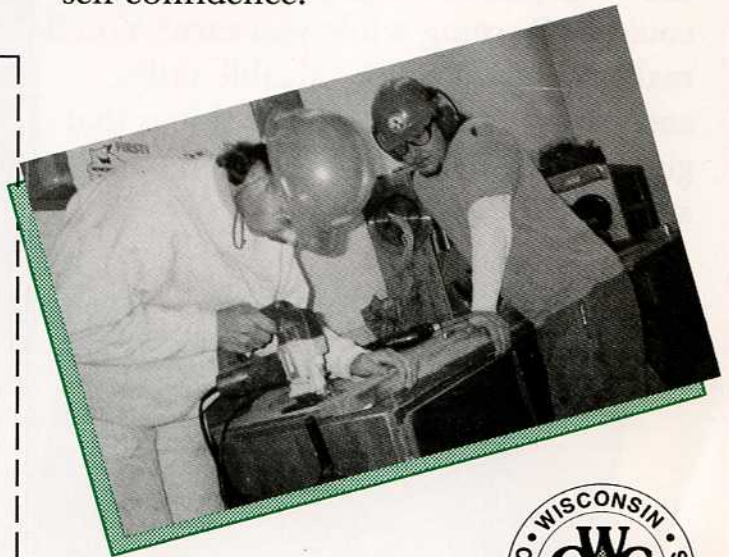

The WCC offers opportunities for young adults.

Applicants must be 18 to 25 years old, unemployed, and Wisconsin residents. Corps members are paid minimum wage and, after twelve months of service, can receive a tuition voucher or a cash bonus. During their service, corps members receive training in first aid, wildfire control, and a wide variety of light construction and conservation skills. They also build dependable job skills and increase their self-confidence.

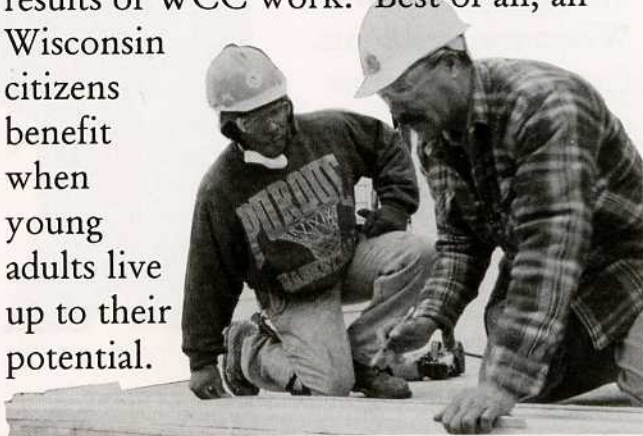

The WCC works statewide.

At any one time, about 50 crews are working at locations throughout the state. Each crew is sponsored for one year by a government agency, non-profit organization, or a combination of either. The sponsor provides the projects, materials, and transportation; the WCC provides training, wages, Worker's Compensation, supervision, and safety equipment.

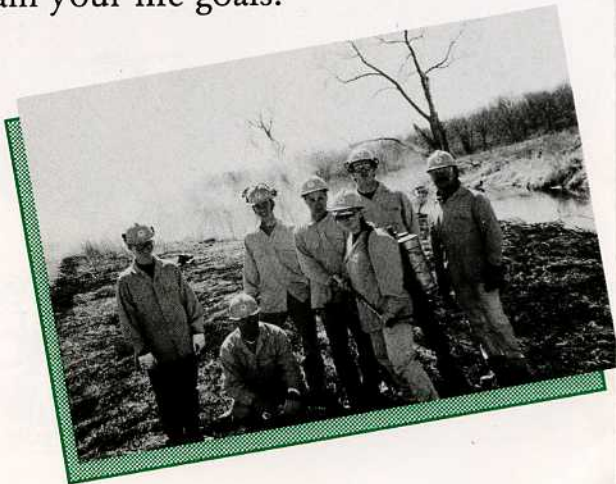

The results are clear to see.
Tall pines, sturdy observation
decks and boardwalks,

weatherized homes, clear trails and thriving wildlife are just some of the results of WCC work. Best of all, all Wisconsin
citizens
benefit
when young adults live up to their potential.

Now, more than ever, joining the WCC makes sense. Why just cash a paycheck when you could be learning while you earn? You'll make friends, acquire valuable skills,
and grow as a person—all the things that give you the head start you need to attain your life goals.

Would
you like to hear more about the WCC? It's easy.
Detailed info about
WCC projects,
employment
opportunities, and project sponsorship
is available.

Please write or call:
Wisconsin Conservation Corps
30 W. Mifflin, Suite 406
Madison, WI 53703-2558
(608) 266-7730

Wisconsin
Conservation Corps:
Working for Wisconsin.
Working for the future.
Working for you.